Reference is made to memorandum from Attorney General January 31, 1976, (attached) wherein the Attorney General stated he has understanding that the Bureau intends to update its list of official agents of the [REDACTED] now in the United States. He regarded the action as appropriate; however, he believes it should not be designated as a detention list. Director Kelley asked the question, "What is basis for this?"

Memorandum W. A. Branigan to Mr. W. R. Wannall January 9, 1976, advised as to desirability for updating PRODIP procedures. Pursuant to instructions from the Deputy Associate Director's Office, SAs W. A. Branigan, [REDACTED] and [REDACTED], conferred with Department of Justice officials January 29, 1976, to see if the Attorney General would have any objections to Bureau contacting Department of State to coordinate PRODIP revisions.

b6

[REDACTED] Counselor to the Attorney General, advised he saw no objections; however, he requested a letter be directed to the Attorney General.

I understand the Bureau intends to up-date its list of official agents of the [REDACTED] now in the United States. I regard this as appropriate. I do not believe it should be designated as a detention list. The only purpose of such a designation would be to remind the Bureau and the Department of the provisions of 50 USC 21, of which I am sure both the Bureau and the Department are well aware.

Recommends FBI liaison officer to State Department effect contact with appropriate officials in that Department in order to update previously approved procedures and to include personnel of countries not included in existing instructions from State Department.

Following World War II, procedures concerning captioned were worked out between the Departments of Justice (FBI) and State with periodic updating to include establishments and personnel of various [REDACTED] countries in the United States. Copies of these guidelines are maintained in the Headquarters of FBI field divisions involved (Chicago, New York and Washington Field) as well as at the FBI Relocation Site at Quantico.

In November, 1970, San Francisco was instructed to handle personnel at the Consulate to be established there as being in "travel status" until the establishment was formally opened. This occurred during June, 1973; therefore, instructions for action against Consulate personnel there should now be included in the Prodip agreement under a separate section such as currently exists regarding [REDACTED] Consular officials in Chicago.

Following admission of the [REDACTED] we directed a communication to State November 8, 1971, requesting its advice concerning inclusion of [REDACTED] officials in the Prodip plans. Following opening of the [REDACTED] in Washington, another communication was directed to State in 1972, concerning handling of these personnel. Responses were not received from either communication.

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This can be done through market research, which involves gathering information about the target market and its needs. Once a market need has been identified, the next step is to develop a concept for a new product that meets this need. This concept should be based on the market research and should take into account the needs and preferences of the target market. The concept should also be feasible, meaning that it can be developed and produced within the company's resources and capabilities. Once a concept has been developed, the next step is to create a prototype of the product. This can be done through a process of prototyping, which involves creating a small-scale model of the product that can be used to test the concept and gather feedback from potential customers. Once a prototype has been created, the next step is to conduct a feasibility study. This study should evaluate the technical, financial, and market feasibility of the product. Once the feasibility study has been completed, the next step is to develop a business plan for the product. This plan should outline the company's strategy for developing and marketing the product, as well as the financial projections for the product. Once a business plan has been developed, the next step is to secure funding for the product. This can be done through a variety of methods, including seeking investment from venture capitalists, banks, or other sources. Once funding has been secured, the next step is to develop a marketing plan for the product. This plan should outline the company's strategy for promoting and selling the product, including the use of advertising, public relations, and other marketing techniques. Once a marketing plan has been developed, the next step is to produce the product. This can be done through a process of manufacturing, which involves creating the product in large quantities. Once the product has been produced, the next step is to distribute the product to the target market. This can be done through a variety of methods, including using a distributor, selling the product directly to customers, or using a combination of these methods. Finally, the last step in the process of creating a new product is to evaluate the product's performance in the market. This can be done through a process of evaluation, which involves gathering feedback from customers and analyzing sales data to determine the product's success in the market.
